

Table of contents

Abbreviations	viii
Tables and maps	xii
Acknowledgements	xiii
1. When the compass points South – An introduction	1
2. Theoretical foundations and contributions	7
2.1. Theories of regional integration (ca. 1940–1989)	7
2.1.1. Federalism	8
2.1.2. Functionalism	9
2.1.3. Neo-functionalism	11
2.1.4. Transaction analysis	12
2.1.5. Intergovernmentalism	13
2.1.6. Neoclassic economic theory	14
2.1.7. Families of Nations	15
2.1.8. Dependency, structuralism and neo-colonialism	16
2.1.9. The disappearance of integration theory’s raison d’être	17
2.1.10. Critique	18
2.2. The second generation of integration theories (post-1989)	22
2.2.1. EU theories	24
2.2.2. Contributions from International Relations	25
2.2.3. Cultural determinism	29
2.2.4. Neoliberal and neostructuralist economics	30
2.2.5. International Political Economy	32
2.2.6. New Regionalism Approach	33
2.2.7. Critique	35
2.3. Current research trends	41
2.3.1. Comparative regionalism	41
2.3.2. Comparing regionalisms in the South	47
2.3.3. Interregionalism	58
2.3.4. Critique	63
2.4. Towards a re-conceptualisation of regions, regionalisms and regional space	65
2.4.1. Navigating in a fragmented field	65
2.4.2. Revisiting the sovereignty and territoriality of regions	67
2.4.3. Surpassing normativity and EU-centrism	71
2.4.4. Overcoming dichotomies	72
2.4.5. Exploring regional spaces	74

2.4.6.	Reassessing the comparative approach in the study of regionalism	78
3.	Methodology and research design	80
3.1.	Research questions	80
3.2.	Case selection	81
3.3.	Research design	85
3.4.	The challenges of fieldwork in Southern Africa and South America	92
3.5.	Methodological remarks on comparative regionalism	95
4.	New regionalisms in the South: SADC and Mercosur	103
4.1.	Antecedents of the new regionalisms – A brief journey through two centuries of regional projects	103
4.1.1.	Post-colonial regionalism in Latin America	103
4.1.2.	Late and post-colonial regionalism in Southern Africa	112
4.2.	Framework and conditions for the emergence of SADC and Mercosur	121
4.2.1.	The common global framework	122
4.2.2.	The individual local conditions	126
4.3.	Institutionalisation	131
4.3.1.	Regionalism on paper	131
4.3.2.	Expansive regionalism	141
4.3.3.	Shifts in the institutional production of space	147
4.4.	Regional spaces and scales	153
4.4.1.	Political spaces	153
4.4.2.	Economic space	157
4.4.3.	Social space	162
4.4.4.	Including and excluding circles – Competing and encompassing regionalisms	167
4.5.	The structures of regional actors	172
4.5.1.	Nation States – Interpresidentialism and intergovernmentalism	173
4.5.2.	The private sector – Networks and alliances	179
4.5.3.	Civil society – Counteractions and alignments	182
4.6.	Concluding remarks	188
5.	Interregionalism – A South Atlantic perspective	192
5.1.	The antecedents of interregionalism – An influential legacy	193
5.2.	Regional organisations and external relations – Institutional experiments	198
5.2.1.	Mercosur: Keeping the house in order and going fishing	198

5.2.2. SADC: Trouble in the neighbourhood and a relative that never leaves	202
5.2.3. SACU: The hegemon's new clothes	203
5.2.4. Comparative remarks	205
5.3. Interregional relations and the construction of the South Atlantic	206
5.3.1. Mercosur, SADC and SACU – The tale of an arranged wedding	206
5.3.2. Transregional and multinational arenas – Creating a common space, layer by layer	215
5.4. Brazil-South Africa – The regional power nexus	225
5.5. The mutual influence of regional models – Consolidating a South-North-South pattern	230
5.5.1. South-South partnerships – Learning or teaching?	230
5.5.2. Formalised learning processes	231
5.5.3. Interregional elites	233
5.5.4. Indirect influencing – A triangular approach to the EU	235
5.5.5. SACU, Mercosur and institutional isomorphism	244
5.6. Concluding remarks	245
6. Comparing regionalisms in the South and studying regional spaces – Conclusions	246
6.1. Conceptual and theoretical implications	246
6.2. Revisions and broader connotations	251
References	255
Official sources	299
Interviews	301
Example of a thread with guidelines for interviews with SADC personnel	307